

Andreu van Hooft ('s-Hertogenbosch, the Netherlands, 1962), MA Spanish Philology, Universitat de Barcelona / Estudi General de Lleida (Spain, 1986); PhD. Spanish Philology, Universitat de Lleida (Spain, 1995 Cum Laude and 1996, Premio Extraordinario de Doctorado / Outstanding Doctoral Thesis Research Award). Since 1990 is an Assistant Professor at the department of Communication and Information Studies (CIS) at Radboud University Nijmegen (RU), the Netherlands. As a researcher, he is affiliated with the Centre for Language Studies at the same University and specifically with the programme 'Language in society: Non Nativeness in communication" (<http://cls.ruhosting.nl/non-nativeness/>). He has published articles in Spanish, Catalan, Dutch and English on Spanish for Special Purposes, the effect of language choice in advertising, visual metaphors in advertising, and corporate logos, on the relation between personality traits and foreign languages and culture in intercultural business communication context. As well as, articles on Spanish and Catalan literature and the relations between the Spanish, Catalan, Basque and Galician literatures. He has participated in several international congresses (e.g. Association of Business Communication, International Conference on Research in Advertising, Congreso de Español para Fines Específicos), his member of the editorial board of the journals Gràfica and Revista Científica Internacional de Comunicación y Publicidad (International Journal of Advertising and Communication), and he has been an ad hoc reviewer for, e.g., the International Journal of Advertising, Cahiers du Geres, Chinese Journal of Communication, Revista Signos and editor of the proceeding series CIEFE (2000 – 2018) and two issues of the journal Foro Hispánico. He has reviewed two research proposals for the Fondo Nacional de Desarrollo Científico y Tecnológico the National Science Foundation of Chile.